"The cornerstone of the OpenText strategy is ensuring our customer's information enables and informs their digital business. We are helping the world's most complex organizations improve information security, governance, collaboration and analytics," said Mark J. Barrenechea, OpenText CEO & CTO. "With a compelling set of cloud and off-cloud offerings, OpenText Content Services is a strategic platform for the world's largest businesses and governments. On behalf of our customers, OpenText is honored to be recognized by Gartner as a 2019 Leader."

The world's largest and most innovative companies and governments turn to OpenText Content Services to recuse compliance risk with records management and document management capabilities, while embedding collaboration, workflow and other productivity-boosting technologies into their operations. OpenText technology helps customers break down organizational silos, combine both structured and unstructured datasets and extend across on and off-cloud infrastructures. OpenText integrates seamlessly into business-line applications such as SAP, Salesforce and Microsoft, providing access to content across the organization.

According to Gartner, "Content services platforms are key components of the digital workplace and digital business. At a time of increased emphasis on the cloud, ease of use, AI and governance, this report will help those responsible for digital workplace applications find the right vendor for their strategy." *

OpenText has been named a Leader in this Gartner Magic Quadrant for fifteen consecutive years.

Gartner also released its Critical Capabilities for Content Services Platforms report. This report provides information about OpenText Content Services capabilities.
